THEN the brakes take hold on a slippery day what feature of design V is the surest guarantee against a skid? A chassis of the proper height.

When the holes are many, the ruts deep, and the road shocks severe what feature of design does most to minimize the jar to human nerves? A chassis of the proper height.

When the coach builder undertakes to design a body for the utmost passenger comfort what foundation does he need above all others? A chassis of the proper height.

When charming lines are an additional object what factor is absolutely indispensable for the proper display of his art? A chassis of the proper height.

A chassis of the proper height for these purposes will always be a chassis with a low centre of gravity, which, strange to say, is a consideration only rarely valued at full weight in designing cars of the Mercer class.

But in Mercer it receives full recognition.

The Mercer centre of gravity is low. Watch the Mercer hug a rough road surface. Watch its action when the streets are wet. Study its lines, test its seating comfort.

Bearing as it does the Hare's Motors stamp of high approval, Mercer is designed and built with close attention to every point of fundamental excellence.
